

GREENING SUPPLY CHAIN CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS

22 NOVEMBER 2022 • ARTICLE

Cutting carbon emissions has been a hot topic for some time now within the construction industry. Despite the UK government's net zero strategy being put on pause following the recent ruling from the High Court on its inadequacy, the sector has been gearing towards going green.

In the second article of a two-part series for the Civil Engineering Surveyor, Partner Theresa Mohammed and Associate Emma Thompson continue looking into decarbonising the construction sector, discussing examples highlighting the challenges that building professionals face on supply chain contracts and underscoring the importance of having good contract drafting and contractual contingencies in place to avert and limit risks as and when they arise.
